Lesson: Readers’ Theatre

Readers’ Theatre is a joint dramatic reading from a script with the emphasis on oral expression. It brings a text to life, offers less confident readers support from peers and provides a social purpose for attentive reading. Readers’ Theatre benefits students by increasing their skills as readers, listeners and speakers.

Narrator: Zahra and Binti were sisters. They lived with their father in a village on the River Nile.

All: Once their father went away and left them with his relatives who were cruel and beat them.

Zahra: We can't stay here. Let's run away!

Narrator: The next day, the sisters left and walked until evening came.

All: Far off, they saw two fires, a big one and a little one.

Binti: Where should we go?

Zahra: Let's go to the big fire.

All: They came to a house in the desert. A giant woman with red eyes came from inside.

Giant woman: Welcome! Come in and have something to eat. You can stay the night.

All: After they had eaten, Zahra and Binti went to bed. But they couldn't sleep.

Narrator: They heard the sound of metal scraping against a rock and the woman singing:

Giant woman: Rock is smooth, rock is hard,
and it makes my dull axe sharp.

Narrator: The sisters were frightened, and Binti cried out.

Binti: AHHH! Did you hear that?

Narrator: The giant woman came inside.

Giant woman: What’s the matter?

Zahra: We can’t sleep, The camels are keeping us awake.

All: The woman left her house and walked to the little fire to talk to the camel owners.

Giant woman: You there! Move your camels out of here!

All: But as soon as the woman left, Zahra and Binti jumped out of their bed.

Zahra: Let's put rocks under the blanket, and run away from here! She will think we're sleeping.

Narrator: When the woman returned, she picked up her axe.

All: Whoosh! She swung it at the two bumps in bed. Clang, clang! The axe hit the rocks.

Narrator: The woman screamed in rage.

Giant woman: I will get you! You will pay for this!

Narrator: She ran after the girls.

All: Soon Zahra and Binti saw a cloud of dust behind them.

Binti: Look! The woman is chasing us!

Narrator: The girls came to a wide river. A crocodile was swimming there.
Crocodile: What a juicy dinner they will make!

Binti: Please crocodile, take us to the other side!

Crocodile: I will eat you up!

Zahra: If you take us, I promise you a bigger dinner.

All: So the crocodile took them across. Soon, the giant woman arrived on the other riverbank.

Zahra: Crocodile, go back and bring our auntie.

All: The crocodile went back and the woman jumped on his back.

Narrator: When he was halfway across, Zahra shouted,

Zahra: Crocodile! Your dinner is on your back!

Crocodile: Splash!

Narrator: The crocodile dove under the water and ate the woman up.

All: Zahra and Binti went back to the village and arrived just as their father returned.
